How is it right, that the FCC can dictate what I can, and what I cannot receive, from something that is a fee based subscriber service. As far as I am concerned, what XM broadcasts, is of no business to the FCC. What, a little upset, that XM is more attractive to many people than public radio, since there are no commercials, and they don't censor the heck out of everything you listen to? GET OVER IT! The FCC is the whole reason people like Howard Stern, are now looking at satellite radio as an option. The FCC is driving everyone away from wanting to listen to some crappy radio station, that plays one song, and then 10 minutes of commercials so that they can survive. It's not exactly fair that the FCC thinks it can do as it pleases, and tell everyone what they can and cannot do, especially when it comes to subscriber based services, such as XM satellite radio. Traffic and weather are a really important part of everyone's lives. Does the FCC decide what kind of news I get to watch on TV, especially a subscriber service such as cable, and determine whether or not I get the weather channel? I would certainly hope not. If that were the case, then not only do you have to remove weather and traffic from XM radio, but you must also remove it from cable news stations as well. This is total crap. The FCC thinks it's the god of anything broadcasted in America. And you wonder why people want to challenge you? This whole XM radio and the weather thing, is almost as bad as the Nextel situation with overcrowding the 800 mhz public safety band and trying to clear that mess up. All of a sudden, the FCC doesn't want to give up 1.9 GHz space to Nextel, but wants them to have 2.1 GHz space instead, because one company offered up a billion dollar bid on spectrum space. Talk about total crap. Why doesn't the FCC grow a set of balls, and just say this is the way it is and that's final. Stop listening to these whiny butts about XM is offering things that are city specific, and we want to bid on the spectrum you are offering to Nextel. GET OVER ALL THIS, and do something important for a change, instead of stirring these continuous and stupid situations. Just settle them.
